THE KU LAW REVIEW

Vol. I. Issue 1- Regional integration as the future of International Trade

The KU Law Review is an annual publication, peer reviewed, and student-edited journal published by the Kenyatta University School of Law, (KUSOL). Its main objective is to enhance academic interactions in the legal field by publishing scholarly writings that not only attempt to challenge the status quo, but also examine different perspectives on issues identified by the Editorial Board. The aim of the journal is to offer practical legal solutions that can lead to legal reforms.

The theme of the first issue of the KU Law Review is: Regional Integration as the Future of International Trade. The KU Law Review, thus, welcomes scholarly work that assesses the effectiveness of regional blocks and their place in the future of international trade. Authors are encouraged to consider the following research areas in their submissions:

- The relationship of regional trading blocs to the global trading system.
- Formal and informal integration (e.g., unofficial flows of trade, capital) and how they influence regional integration.
- The role of Transnational Companies (TNCs) and private sector in the regional integration.
- The levels of economic liberalization e.g., entry barriers in domestic jurisdictions; and
- The models of governance in various regional communities.
